

I am saddened to hear that once again the government is siding against the people and for business interest. My husband and I went to the effort of getting our names on the Indiana No-Call List because we were tired of the constant flow of telemarketing phone calls taking quality time away from our family. From the moment we came home until we went to bed, the phone would ring 5-6 times a night. I would be greatly disappointed if the FCC were to lessen the restrictions on this privacy act. I can now enjoy time with my family, knowing that when the phone rings, it will not be a telemarketer. Please reconsider lessen or doing away with this privacy act in Indiana.
